Soldiers' Budget.

Memorial Day.

Once more the nation passes. Its meed of love to lay Above the sleeping soldiers Who were the blue—and gray.
The seams of party discord Time's lyy overgrows.

And North and South plant meekly

Though each once thought the other Upon the erring side, And brothers fought as feemen, The dead we may not chile.

The myrtle and the rose.

So gradge not southern soldiers The wealth of southern flowers. The while we twine the garlands Of tenderest love for ours.

That once in every year The wheels of toil should slacken And memory revere These patient, silent heroes, Who, in young manhood's pride, With most of life before them.

For love of country died. They make no claim upon us, And well-nigh twenty years Have passed since first we crowned them

With reverential tears. In all life's stir and pageant They have no part or lot; So strew the flowers above them

In Memory of Grant.

-Lillian Grey, in Christian at Work,

The approaching dedication of a monument to General R. E. Lee at Richmond, Va., has called general at-tention to the neglect of the North in honoring General Grant in this way. As yet no fitting monument has been erected to the great soldier of the Union, although General Lee has been remembered at New Orleans by a monument and Richmond is to have an imposing celebration on the occasion of he dedication of the monument there. This neglect of General Grant is not due to a lack of appreciation of his services and personal worth, for the following, from the Brooklyn Eagle, doubtless expresses the sentiment of the North toward him: "Ulysses S. Grant, had he survived till this spring morning, would be sixty-eight years old. Nearly five years have gone since he joined the unnumbered host beyond the river. The shock to the nation from his untimely death has died away. The splendid pageant which bore his dust to the tomb seems no more, in the activities of this busy age, than a flitting memory. The garlands in his sepulcher are withered, the trappings of woe are laid aside, the trappings of woe are laid aside, even the projected chief monument to his greatness is becoming a subject of only casual allusion. But Grant has not gone out of the national life. There is a distinction higher and grander than any conferred by storied bronze or emblematic marble. It is the undying sentiment, born of a splendid national spirit, which enshrines the object of its affection in the hearts of a patriotic people. Grant, a century hence, will not lack monuments. Indeed, tributes to his memory in monumental form have already been provided in communities more responsive than the vast aggregation of cosmopolitan elements which, in the hour of funeral gloom, clamored for custody of his honored dust. Whether a stately pile is reared over his last resting-place, in accordance with the original ambitious plan, or a more modest memorial issues from the exertions of the monument committee, his fame will be perpetuated in every quarter of the land. In harmony with a beautiful custom, inaugurated since the civil war, almost every village and cross-roads hamlet has its soldiers' monument. The fanot the familiar lineaments of the bold commander, but the conventional image of the plain boy in blue.' Every little statue reared by reverential hands from the esources of the common people swells unconsciously, nevertheless, the volume of Grant's praise. From the beginning of his remarkable career to his expiring utterances in behalf of fraternity, reconciliation and national unity he was a man of the masses. From actual truth nothing could be further than the portrait of Grant as a ruthless conqueror or a selfish and domineering tyrant. There were, of course, in the hour of his largest endeavors, hands that did not besitate to unsheath behind his back the dirk of defamation. Panoplied in the respect and gratitude of his countrymen, he withstood alike in war and peace the foulest assaults. Villified as few have been, his fame emerged from the clouds of detraction as luminous and serene as the morning star. Every art, vituperative or misrepresentative, was exhausted in the effort to separate him from the heart of American citizenship. To-day he stands second only to the emancipator as the commanding figure of an epoch forever famous in the annals of the world. The towering lion on the field of Waterloo speaks not more eloquently of fateful results than the lowly vault at Riverside. The one marks the final flight of the ravening eagle, the other the last retreat of one who

Both are symbols of enormous significance. With trumpet tongues they tell the tale of liberty preserved. But who shall say at this stage of human progress that the glory of Grant is not the larger or the significance of his story of graver import in its bearing on the destinies of the race? With Washington, the father, and Lincoln, the savior, must ever stand till time shall be no more Grant, the preserver of the country. No higher culogy to the hero of Donelson and Vicksburg, the Wilderness and Appomatox could be framed than his enrollment in this matchless company or that embodied in the characterization worthily bestowed on another in these memorable words:

The statesman warrior, moderate, resolute, Whole in himself, a common good.

Our greatest, yet with least pretense, Great in council and great in war, Foremost captain of his time, Rich in saving common sense, And, as the greatest only are, In his simplicity sublime."

Its approach is stealthy and it permeates every fibre of the body, and remedies, which if applied at the outset, by delay lose their power. Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills have proven the most valuable malarial autidote ever discovered. The little toy dog is covered with dust, But sturdy and staunch he stands; And the little toy soldier is red with rust, And his musket moulds in his hands.

Time was when the little toy dog was new And the soldier was passing fair; And that was the time when Little Boy Blue Kissed them and put them there.

Now don't you go till I come," he said, " And don't you make any noise! So, tobdiing off to his trundle-bed, He dreamt of the pretty toys.

And, as he was dreaming, an angel song Awakened our Little Boy Blue; Oh, the years are many the years are long. But the little toy friends are true.

Ay, faithful to Little Boy Blue they stand, Each in the same old place, Awaiting the touch of a little hand. The smile of a little face; And they wondered, as waiting these long years through.

In the dust of that little chair.
What has become of our Little Boy Blue
Since he kissed them and put them there.

How a Tead Undressed.

A peal of laughter from the back yard aroused Mrs. Lee from her afternoon nap with a start that set her head to aching very violently again. She had lain down to sleep off this disagreeable headache, and was peacefully slumbering on the sofa in her cool, darkened parlor, lost to everything about her in a restful sleep, when the up-roarious laughter of her children startled

"O dear! I shall go wild if this headache does not leave me soon," Mrs. Lee to herself, as she pressed her hands to her throbbing temples. She again closed her eyes to try and sleep, when the children's merriment took extra force, and the laughter changed to a scream. The tumult seemed as though its object might be to frighten off a band of Indian braves.

"Rest is impossible," sighed Mrs. Lee, " with such a noisy group of children at play so near the house." She arose languidly and threw open the blinds of the window that opened toward the garden. The children stood in a circle, watching something on the ground with great interest, while screams of laughter told quite well that they had found something uncommon Mrs. Lee stepped upon the porch, half forgetting her headache in the excite-nent that seemed "catching" like a

"O, mamma," exclaimed Allie, when she saw her mother watching them, "Come here and see what we have

"Do come, mamma," cried all the children in chorus, as they clapped their hands and shouted at the top of their voices. " Hush, children," said Mrs. Lee, as she went slowly down the walk. You will alarm the neighborhood if you are not quiet." "You will laugh, too," cried Willie, in his boisterous way, "when you see what this toad is doing," and they made room for her in the circle. Mrs. Lee came upon the scene in time to see the toad give a little con-vulsive gulp at something it was swallowing and then hop away. "Well, what is there so much out of the ordinary run of a toad's conduct in eating, and after swallowing its food, hop away to find something else it may devour. If that is what caused all this noise, I must say you are easily amused." Their crestfallen appearance amused her for a moment, when Willie exclaimed:

"O, mamma, it was awful funny; for he swallowed his clothes!" "Swallowed his clothes!" How

"He really did swallow his skin, mamma," exclaimed Harry, the eldest. "It looked so much like he undressed and swallowed his clothes, that Willie calls it 'swallowing his clothes." " "That surely was curious. I am sorry I did not see the performance." "O, there is another toad going to undress," exclaimed Willie, pointing to one only a few feet away.

The lady and her children now gathered around another large toad. It was acting queer, and they watched it with interest to see what it would do. Sir Toad appeared sluggish and quite unconscious of their presence, while he pressed his elbow against his side and rubbed downward.

After a few smart rubs his skin began to burst open along the back, but he kept rubbing until he had worked all his skin into folds on his sides and hips. He then grasped one bind leg with his hands, which looked almost human, and pulled the skin from that leg.

shouted Willie. An explosion of laughter followed, and then all became quiet, awaiting the next move, which was the removal of the right pant-leg.

He now pulled his cast-off garment forward, between his fore legs into his mouth and swallowed it.

"Why don't you give your old pants to an orphan, or sell 'em to a rag man, Mr. Toady?" queried the jocose Willie, in such a comical tone that Mrs. Lee joined heartily in the laugh.

Mr. Toady paid no attention to this question. He was raising and lowering his head, swallowing as his head came down, thus stripping off his skin from his abdomen until he came to his forelegs. ... Now he is going to pull off his sleeve," said Allie. Grasping one of the fore legs with the opposite hand, by considerable pulling he stripped off the the skin.

He now by a slight motion of the head, and all the time swallowing, drew the skin from the neck, and swallowed the last of his late costume. But he was none the poorer, because he now appeared in a dazzling new suit, and seemed well contented with himself over his new spring clothes and hearty dinner. He now hopped away, while Mrs. Lee laughed heartily with the children, who almost shrieked with merriment.— American Rural Home.

THE LITERARY WORLD, E. H. Hames & Co., Boston, publishers, is in its twenty-first volume. Its present motto is, "Books, we know, are a sub-stantial world, both pure and good," and its noble aim is to bring men into contact with just such a "world." If a specialist is a sine qua non in any field, why not in the field of books? To "fan" the contents of the ceaseless press and winnow out the chaff is handsome pictures which the article contains, including portraits of " Baby McKee," Mrs. Harrison, and the four generations now residing in the White House, make it especially interesting to every American father, mother and child. This number also contains a pic-ture of four of "mother's darlings" "Out for an Airing," which is a su-perb water-color, equal in design and execution to those selling at a high price at the art stores. "Athletics for Women" is also finely illustrated; and "The Lady Tramp" will no doubt start many of "Our Girls" off on the healthful exercise, for it tells them just what to do and what to wear when doing it. All other departments are full to overflowing with entertaining and helpful matter, and the stories are particularly good.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for June is a brilliant and eminently readable number. The complete novel is contributed by Mary E. Stickney, and is entitled "Circumstantial Evidence." It is a story of the misunderstandings, jealousies and final reconciliation of a young couple, told in a natural and charming manner. Robert Kennaway Douglas has an interesting article upon "The Origin of Chinese Culture and Civilization." Mr. Douglas points out that the Chinese were not aboriginal in China, but were immigrants into the country from Babylonie. A paper upon George Henry Boker is contributed by the eminent critic, R. H. Stoddard. The first installment of an entertaining series called "Round-Robin Talks" appears in this number. It gives an account of the gathering together of a collection of bright people, many of them contributors to the magazine, and it is full of amusing anecdotes, clever talk and brilliant re-partee. Julian Hawthorne, Max O'Rell, John Habberton, Edgar Fawcett, J. Armoy Knox, William S. Walsh and Maurice Barrymore are among the well-known characters who figure in this first installment of "Round-Robin Talks."

De Wolfe, Fiske & Co., Boston. Price $1. Mr. Murray has found a rare opportunity for giving ie n to his imagination and descriptive powers. The lake is rich with tradition, historical events and natural beauty of the highest kind. It is an inspiring theme, and to the author it has suggested a little volume of intense interest to residents along the lake, visitors to it and readers of history. He treats the subject in a racy, suggestive way, not pretending to go exhaustively into details, but giving the leading phases of the subject space and attention ample to fix place and story firmly in the minds of readers. It is a book that has a reason for existing, and it is certainly fortunate that so appreciative and competent a writer as Mr. Murray set his hand to the pleasant task-for it must have been a real pleasure to make the investigations which the subject called for. The work will attract attention to the honorable record Vermont made in the two wars with England, as well as to those prerevolutionary struggles about the lake which gave the men of New England and New York the training that made the war for independence successful. Mr. Murray calls to his aid in describing the fishing of the lake A. Nelson Cheney of Glens Falls, N. Y., who contributes an interesting chapter on "The Game Fish and Fishing of Luke Champlain." The book ought to popularize the lake for pleasure seekers to an extent not dreamed of before.
